Exploring the needs of mothers in rural settings: the focus group protocol. This article describes the focus group protocol used to explore the perceived needs of mothers in rural settings. The purpose of this study was to uncover specific topics of interest and to identify barriers and facilitators to seeking mental health services. Purposive sampling strategies were used to identify 15 focus groups from a sample of 75 mothers. Data were analyzed using both directed and thematic analysis approaches. Specific topics of interest included: availability and access of mental health care, parenting issues and depression, and relationships between depression and
